

Results from Source Water Assessments for Transient Non-Community Drinking Water Systems in Utah

This table contains a list of drinking water systems in Utah that serve transient populations. The systems may be parks, campgrounds, rest areas, restaurants, resorts, or other similar facilities. The chart is organized by county, and then alphabetically by the system name. Browse the list by county and then by name, or use the Adobe Acrobat “Find” command to look for the system name, or part of the name.

The chart shows the general kinds of potential contamination sources that could affect the system’s drinking water sources. The chart also contains a susceptibility rating, which describes how susceptible the drinking water source might be to the potential contamination sources. It’s important to note that the list of potential contamination sources doesn’t mean that any of these potential contamination sources are actually affecting the system’s sources, or that they ever will; it only means that it is possible. The susceptibility rating is a general indication of how possible it might be. Susceptibility is estimated by how close the potential contamination sources are, how well constructed the drinking water source is, and the nature of the potential contamination sources, among other factors.

Information in these tables generally comes from reports titled “Source Water Assessments”, which were completed by the Division of Drinking Water in 2002 and provided to each water system. Copies were also given to the local health department. However, systems marked with an asterisk (*) have completed Drinking Water Source Protection plans; in that case, the information in this table was extracted from that report.

If you have any questions about a specific system, and if you live near the system, we recommend that you contact the owner/manager and ask to look at their Source Water Assessment/Drinking Water Source Protection Plan. If you live elsewhere, please contact the Division of Drinking Water at (801) 536-4200, and ask for the Special Services Section.
